The view from the hotel showed a river winding its way through trees and open countryside.

and open moorland.

Exmoor is a mixture of open farmland, mainly grazed by sheep,

The group walked through woods,

deciduous woods and streams,

across fields with moorland in the distance,

through open country

and across moorland.

The group walked up to Dunkery Hill, the highest point in Exmoor,

Local drystone walling was seen,

from which views of the sea could be seen.

as were the famous Exmoor ponies.

The weather was mixed, being very hot and sunny on arrival, then cool and wet and finally brighter on the last day.
